LITTLEJOHN: 'Under-cover' out in the open

WILSON, like his Tory predecessors, is trying to keep the lid on a middle-class riot. In a reply to a Parliamentary question yesterday, he said there will be no inquiry into the Littlejohn allegations despite the fact that Labour government ministers had been involved in the affair. Clearly the Labour opposition was too preoccupied with the subject of the Tory government's recent scandal to notice this.

The Daily Worker has learnt that a group of Labour government ministers had been involved in the Littlejohn scandal. The group, which included the Home Secretary, the Foreign Secretary, and the Treasury, had been involved in a series of illegal acts, including the interception of communications and the use of informers. The scandal had been brought to the attention of the authorities by a whistle-blower, who had been arrested under the Official Secrets Act.

Labour has demanded an inquiry into the Littlejohn scandal. A spokesman said: "The Labour Party is deeply concerned at the allegations of misconduct by some Labour government ministers. We demand a full and independent inquiry into these matters."
STRIKES MAY END FEUDAL DICTATORSHIP

The NEXT STAGE in the campaign against the dictatorship in Bangladesh may be the escalation of the brutally repressive regime. A recent poll of 29 million people in Bangladesh shows that 96% of them are strongly against the current government. On March 26th, the 6th anniversary of the liberation war, thousands of workers and students demonstrated in the streets of Dhaka against the regime of General Zia Al-Hilli. The demonstration was brutally suppressed by the army, which killed at least 20 people and arrested hundreds. The following day, the army launched a massive offensive against the protesters, using helicopters and tanks. The result was a bloodbath, with at least 100 people killed and thousands injured. The regime's response was to declare a state of emergency and impose a curfew.

The government's brutal tactics have not deterred the people of Bangladesh from resisting the dictatorship. In the past few months, there have been numerous protests and strikes, including a general strike on March 29th. The protesters demand the release of political prisoners, an end to corruption, and the withdrawal of the army from the streets. The regime's response has been to crack down even harder, with more arrests and violence.

The situation in Bangladesh is危急. The people are fighting for their freedom and dignity. The international community must support their struggle by providing humanitarian aid and raising awareness of the human rights abuses. The regime must be held accountable for its crimes and the international community must take action to bring about a peaceful resolution to the conflict.

---

EMERGENCY

The situation in Bangladesh is危急. The people are fighting for their freedom and dignity. The international community must support their struggle by providing humanitarian aid and raising awareness of the human rights abuses. The regime must be held accountable for its crimes and the international community must take action to bring about a peaceful resolution to the conflict.
ANZIAN WORKERS

Discovering their own power

SEVERAL strikes recently have shelled whatever myths still remain about the activity of workers in face of bad conditions, as in TAEW, JAL, and the workers in Nottingham, Manchester, London, in the offices of Naunton, Gummerton Press, among others, and many more were reported by a press shock in the peak of racism.

RACE TODAY’s current series is about the white workers’ strike in Nottingham for 4 hours. It was a strike against the racist and the anti-racist white workers.

Musatit Hussein’s account is a deep one of the rapid development in the consciousness of the white workers. It is a story of the workers who stood together against the racism of the white worker.

Hussein started work in 1965 in a firm in Nottingham for 4 hours. It was a strike to protect the black workers. The workers were buscous in the fight against the racism of the white worker.

Miserable

Soon, however, the workers got to know some white workers who were on strike. "It was a shock to us when we realized that we are discriminated to," said one worker. "We had never thought that we would be treated like this as a white person."

Musatit Hussein was made to work in a factory where he was offered a position of the United Glass Factory in South Africa. He then wrote to his friend, Celruta. "My experience in South Africa is much more a struggle against the racism of the white workers." He added, "We are the victims of the racism, and we have to fight against it."

By this lightning leap from initial involvement to solid class consciousness union organisation resulted in the struggle against the racism of the white workers.

But this movement did not happen overnight. It was a slow and hard struggle that took time and effort.

Internal manipulation and demagoguery, had destroyed any real internal democracy inside the TAEW. It is now a new TAEW, bureaucratically organised and controlled, and sometimes even left of the left organisation.

It is this organisation that now seeks to build a rank and file movement. It is probably important that such a movement should be developed by some political leadership. The question is, which tendency with which politics. The trouble with this movement is that it is IS, with its tail, line-of-centre politics that is dominating.

Nevertheless on balance it has made considerable progress last Saturday notwithstanding the IS’s domination so far is a political and not a bureaucratic domination. Soon, that is. As far as we can see, very little change will be necessary in the structure of the IS.

In a further example as for IS over a decade of inactivity in the meaningless street-corner battles of the Common Market – only in 1971 were some genuine opposition to its politics in order to avoid hardening against the steam

of working class opposition to the Common Market.

Its approach in the rank and file movement is exactly the same. It would be blinding to IS or any of its delegates to the conference were to see that they more important than us. But, in their view and now, under their influence, the view of their militant working class contacts is to go beyond the generalisation that racism splits the working class and to fight against racism aggressively into the labour movement that is necessarily to provoke the struggle.

Better still to generalise and build the revolutionary party.

Never mind that a revolutionary party built on this soft options approach is a ram and a mockery which can only collapse when the struggle becomes intense.

The same approach can be seen on the question of Ireland. Where the Organising Committee has a revolutionary body, it would have seized on a political and not bureaucratic domination. Inside IS, it is now a new IS, bureaucratically organised and controlled, and sometimes even left of the left organisation.

It is this organisation that now seeks to build a rank and file movement. It is probably important that such a movement should be developed by some political leadership. The question is, which tendency with which politics. The trouble with this movement is that it is IS, with its tail, line-of-centre politics that is dominating.

Nevertheless on balance it has made considerable progress last Saturday notwithstanding the IS’s domination so far is a political and not a bureaucratic domination. Soon, that is. As far as we can see, very little change will be necessary in the structure of the IS.

In a further example as for IS over a decade of inactivity in the meaningless street-corner battles of the Common Market – only in 1971 were some genuine opposition to its politics in order to avoid hardening against the steam

of working class opposition to the Common Market.

Its approach in the rank and file movement is exactly the same. It would be blinding to IS or any of its delegates to the conference were to see that they more important than us. But, in their view and now, under their influence, the view of their militant working class contacts is to go beyond the generalisation that racism splits the working class and to fight against racism aggressively into the labour movement that is necessarily to provoke the struggle.

Better still to generalise and build the revolutionary party.

Never mind that a revolutionary party built on this soft options approach is a ram and a mockery which can only collapse when the struggle becomes intense.

The same approach can be seen on the question of Ireland. Where the Organising Committee has a revolutionary body, it would have seized on a political and not bureaucratic domination. Inside IS, it is now a new IS, bureaucratically organised and controlled, and sometimes even left of the left organisation.
L Borga's 100-year-old movement continues to attract attention among workers. The TUC has been involved in the struggle for the rights of workers, and the current situation is no exception.

The TUC plays a crucial role in the battle for workers' rights. It is a powerful organization that stands up for the rights of working people. The TUC has been instrumental in fighting for better working conditions, higher wages, and safer workplaces.

The TUC's efforts are not limited to the UK. It is an international organization that represents the interests of workers around the world. The TUC has been active in campaigns for workers' rights in many countries, including the United States, Canada, and South Africa.

The TUC has a rich history and has been involved in many significant events, including the World War I and World War II. The TUC has played a crucial role in the development of modern labor movements and has been instrumental in the creation of many of the laws and regulations that protect workers' rights.

The TUC is an organization that stands up for the rights of workers and fights for a better future for all working people. It is an organization that values the contributions of workers and is committed to ensuring that their voices are heard. The TUC is an organization that works tirelessly to improve the lives of workers and to ensure that they are treated with dignity and respect.

The TUC is an organization that is worth supporting, and we encourage everyone to do so. By supporting the TUC, we are supporting the rights of workers and the future of a fair and just society. Let us all stand together in solidarity and work towards a better world for all workers.

The TUC is an organization that is committed to improving the lives of workers and ensuring that they are treated with dignity and respect. It is an organization that stands up for the rights of workers and fights for a better future for all working people. It is an organization that is worth supporting, and we encourage everyone to do so.